

Five Lewis, Longman & Walker Attorneys Admitted to Practice Before the U.S. Supreme Court

Milestone Reflects Firm's Depth in Appellate Advocacy and Ability to Serve Clients Through Every Stage of Litigation

West Palm Beach, Fla., June 3, 2025 – Lewis, Longman & Walker, P.A. is pleased to announce that attorneys Andrew J. Baumann, Amy Taylor Petrick, Telsula C. Morgan, John J. Cavaliere, III, and Aaron R. Modiano have been admitted to the U.S. Supreme Court Bar. This milestone marks a significant moment in their careers, joining an elite group of attorneys eligible to represent clients before the nation's highest court.

Although admission to the U.S. Supreme Court Bar is not required for most practitioners, fewer than 10% of attorneys nationwide take this step. This milestone reflects LLW's readiness to represent and advocate for its clients at every appellate level and highlights the firm's long-standing reputation for handling complex and high stakes matters from inception through final resolution.

"While most legal cases may never reach the Supreme Court, our clients benefit from knowing their legal team has the experience and authorization to go the distance," said Tara Duhy, President of Lewis, Longman & Walker, P.A. "We handle exceptional cases, and this reflects the exceptional nature of our team."

Admission to the U.S. Supreme Court Bar requires meeting stringent criteria, including sponsorship by current U.S. Supreme Court Bar members and completing a formal application process.

LLW attorneys have deep knowledge of environmental, land use, regulatory, and administrative law. Their admission to the U.S. Supreme Court Bar reflects both their individual qualifications and the firm's broader strategy of providing services through every stage of the legal process.
